QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The Questions Presented are:

1. Whether the Supreme Court of Arkansas erred in holding and deciding that the search warrant and the search conducted thereunder were legal?

A. Whether the State of Arkansas should be permitted to search an individual's apartment based on an affidavit founded on an alleged constitutional law that appellant asserts is repugnant to the 1st, 4th and 14th Amendments to the United States Constitution?

B. Whether the State of Arkansas should be permitted to use material seized pursuant to said law to try petitioner on another matter, sidestepping the illegality of the search by opting not to prosecute under the same statute?

C. Whether a search warrant issued by a magistrate authorizing a nighttime search of premises for violations of possession of obscene material, founded on a hearsay affidavit of a prosecuting attorney based on the unrecorded statement of a six year old boy and his mother, is repugnant to the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution?

D. Whether the State erred by ruling a nighttime search was appropriate and which did not rule on the failure of the State to comply with Ark. Rules of Criminal Procedure Rule 13.6?

2. Whether the Supreme Court of Arkansas erred in applying the "Wicks rule" against the petitioner but permitted the State of Arkansas to raise on appeal issues not raised at the trial level as being a violation of the equal protection of the laws guarantee? (Wicks v State, 270 Ark. 781).

3. Whether the Supreme Court erred in upholding the Arkansas Discovery Rules as not being violative of Due Process guarantees? (Ark. Stats. Sec. 43-801).

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF ARKANSAS

Petitioner prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the Supreme Court of Arkansas entered in the above case on October 4, 1982 and on which rehearing was denied November 8, 1982.

REPORT OF OPINION OF COURT BELOW

The opinion of the Arkansas Supreme Court in this case is officially reported in 277 Ark. 177 and a copy thereof along with the dissenting opinion is appended to this Petition.

CONCISE STATEMENT OF GROUNDS OF THIS COURT'S JURISDICTION

This was a criminal proceeding brought by the State of Arkansas charging the appellant with a felony, rape in violation of Arkansas Criminal Code Section 41-1803, Acts of Arkansas 1975, No. 280, p. 500. Evidence was submitted in this case which was obtained pursuant to a search warrant seizure based on an alleged violation of the Arkansas Obscenity Law, Section 41-3565 (2).

The judgment of affirmance by the Supreme Court of Arkansas sought to be reviewed was dated and filed October 4, 1982 and an Order denying a rehearing was dated and filed in the Supreme Court of Arkansas November 8, 1982.

Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1257 (3).

The validity of a statute of Arkansas is involved in this petition. The Arkansas Obscenity Law, Section 41 3565 (2), states:

> "Every person who, with knowledge of its contents, has in his possession any obscene printed or written matter or materials, other than mailable matter known by such person to have been . . . shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000.00 or be imprisoned in the county jail for a period not to exceed one year, or both."

Cases believed to sustain this petition are Smith v. California, 261 U.S. 147 (80 S.Ct. 215), Redrup v. N.Y., Austin v. Ky and Gent v. Arkansas, 386 U.S. 767 (87 S.Ct. 1414) Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557, United States v. Thirty-Seven Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 91 S.Ct. 1400 and Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204 (101 S.Ct. 1642) and Wardius v. Oregon, 412 U.S. 470.

CONCISE STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The petitioner was charged with the offense of rape, violation of Ark. Stat. Ann. Section 41-1803, two counts by information filed by the State of Arkansas. (R. 2)

A search of petitioners apartment was made after the deputy prosecuting attorney signed an affidavit presenting testimony to a magistrate of allegations concerning deviate sexual activity between petitioner and a six year old boy after the six year old boy advised the prosecutor that petitioner possessed materials in his apartment that violated the Arkansas Obscenity law and a nighttime search was conducted after the child's mother provided information that petitioner would be going to his parents home for a visit the next day. (R. 4-6, set out in appellants brief pps. 6-12) Forty-three rolls of film, two boxes of slides, a viewer, small booklets, hardback books, photographs and miscellaneous other items were seized in the nighttime search. (R. 6) Only one item was admitted into evidence in the trial of this case. (R. 1286)

Several pre-trial hearings were had in this case after appropriate defense Motions had been filed. These include a Motion to Suppress Evidence obtained in the search based upon a state statute that prohibits the possession of obscene materials. (R. 25) Objection was made based on the 1st, 4th and 14th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution and Article 2 of the Arkansas Constitution as well as a Motion to Exclude being filed as being not admissible even though the trial court had denied the Motion to Suppress. (R. 118, 110)

Petitioner further requested to take discovery depositions of the State's witnesses including the alleged victim and his mother. (R. 18-19) The trial Court denied this Motion. (R. 64)

The petitioner had further alleged as grounds for suppressing the evidence that the hearsay affidavit was based on the sworn yet unrecorded statement made outside the presence of the magistrate of a six year old child not previously determined to be competent by anyone; that there was no probable cause for its issuance; that compliance with grounds for a nighttime search were not met and Criminal Rule 13.6 dealing with seizure of obscene material was not complied with. All of the above grounds were overruled by the trial court. (R. 775-791)

A trial began July 9, 1981 and a mistrial declared due to the child being ill that day. (R. 795)

The second trial began July 29, 1981 and ended July 31, 1981. The Court directed a verdict in favor of petitioner at the end of the State's case and the other count went to the jury on July 31 with the jury returning a verdict of guilty and a sentence of 10 years and a $7500.00 fine was imposed. (R. 192)

Notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Arkansas was filed August 3, 1981 by petitioner (R. 194) and a jurisdictional statement was filed February 25, 1982, asserting the constitutionality of the Arkansas Obscenity Law as basis for appellate jurisdiction in that court.

The petitioner enumerated as error the overruling of the Motion to Suppress evidence (Point I, A-D), the introduction of the item seized pursuant thereto (Point VI) and the denial of the Motion to depose state's witnesses (Point II).

The decision of the Supreme Court of Arkansas affirming the trial court's decision on these issues was rendered October 4, 1982 and appears at 277 Ark. 177. A Petition for Rehearing was filed by petitioner and denied November 8, 1982 and is attached in this appendix.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT:

The Court below dealt with important questions of law inconsistent with provisions of the United States Constitution.

I.

The Supreme Court of Arkansas held that the search warrant was based on probable cause despite the fact that the warrant was issued on a hearsay affidavit. Petitioner contends that the search warrant did not meet the requirements previously set forth by this Court in Jones v. United States, 362 U.S. 257 (80 S.Ct. 725) holding that reasonable cause may not be established by conclusionary statements. The affidavit for search warrant stated "It is feared that he may leave with some or all of the above described evidence and may be packing it up tonight." (R. 5, p. 11 Appellants brief) In this case the testimony of the six year old boy and the statement of his mother contained in the affidavit of the prosecutor were not recorded and they did not appear before the magistrate. Petitioner submits that such does not comply with the tests required in Aguilar v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108 (1964) and U.S. v. Hunley, 567 F.2d 822.

A. The search warrant is based on possession of the goods seized being a violation of the Arkansas Obscenity Law, Section 43-3565 (2). Petitioner submits that this statute and the search warrant based upon it violate the 1st and 4th Amendments to the Constitution and the 14th Amendment requires it to be applied to the States. Similar statutes have been held to be unconstitutional Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, Marcus v. Search Warrants of Property, 367 U.S. 717, Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1969) and United States v. Thirty Seven Photographs, 402 U.S. 363 (1971).

The Petitioner alleged that the Warrant was illegal and that items were seized which the right to possess is constitutionally protected.

> "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

Amendment Four of the United States Constitution.

B. The Supreme Court of Arkansas in its opinion, page 2 states that appellant has no standing on which to raise the issue of constitutionality of this Statute.

The petitioner was not charged with violation of the Arkansas Obscenity Statute, and thus the State argued for the first time on appeal that petitioner had no standing to raise this point. (Page i, ii, 1-2 Appellee's brief). Petitioner submits that he has the right to question the legality of this statute since the invasion of his apartment was invaded by the State. Jones v. U.S., supra. The Supreme Court of Arkansas admits the rights were prejudiced by the seizure of this item, Opinion page 7. Petitioner submits that the following cases sustain issue raised by petitioner and it was error to permit State to raise standing for the first time on appeal. Sweeney v. Sweeney, 267 Ark. 595, Steagald v. U.S., 451 U.S. 204 (101 S.Ct. 1642)?

C. Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 13.2 provides that search warrants shall be executed between six a.m. and eight p.m. unless (ii) the objects to be seized are in danger of imminent removal". (Set forth in appendix)

The Supreme Court held that there was reason to believe the goods were in imminent removal danger and thus upheld this argument. (Page of Opinion 2) The Dissenting Opinion states that the night time search was not proper because the affidavit stated that the goods were there every time he visited and thus did not uphold the contention that they were in danger of imminent removal. (Dis. Op P. 1-2)

D. Rule 13.6, Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure states that the officers serving a search warrant based on the Arkansas Obscenity Law shall seize "Only such instruments or copies thereof as are reasonable necessary for evidentiary use in a proceeding to determine whether the content of such instruments is constitutionally protected . . . " As noted in the Dissenting opinion, (bottom line of page 2—page 3) ninety-nine percent of the material seized was not introduced into evidence although it had all been presented to the judge and possibly was present even though not introduced in front of the jury. The one book which was introduced was used in closing arguments and further prejudiced petitioners rights. The Arkansas Supreme Court has established, contrary to Federal Rule 53(b), that an alleged error will not be considered on appeal if not first presented to the trial court. Wicks v. State, 270 Ark. 781, 606 S.W.2d 366 (1980).

Petitioner had raised on appeal the interpretation of the rape statute that petitioner was convicted of violating. That is he had raised the issue of vagueness of the definition of the term deviate sexual activity for the first time on appeal. The Supreme Court refused to consider this point for reversal based on the Wicks rule. (See opinion 7-8) Respondent raised for the first time the issue of standing on appeal and even permitted petitioner to raise same as the basis for Supreme Court jurisdiction rather than Court of Appeals jurisdiction in the State of Arkansas. (Appellee's brief i, ii, Point I)

> "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are > citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Amendment 14, United States Constitution.

The Supreme Court has previously decided that the issue of standing cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Steagald v. United States, supra. Further to enforce this requirement against a defendant yet permit a state to raise as a ground for affirmance something not raised at the lower court level is a denial of the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution.

Arkansas Discovery Rules in General are set forth in Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure, Rule 17.1 et seq. However, an imbalance of discovery procedure appears by virtue of Section 43-801, Ark. Stats. Ann. which provides:

> "The prosecuting attorneys and their deputies shall have the authority to issue subpoenas in all criminal matters they are investigating; and shall have authority to administer oaths for the purpose of taking the testimony of witnesses subpoenaed before there; such oath when administered by the prosecuting attorney or his deputy shall have the same effect as if administered by the foreman of the grand jury."

Criminal sanctions are imposed for failure to comply with the subpoena. A defendant is not permitted the same right under the laws of Arkansas and petitioner submits that by existence of this statute and the complete lack of similar discovery rights for a defendant violates the due process principles and rights announced in Wardius v.

Oregon, 412 U.S. 470 (1973). The Court stated that in criminal proceedings discovery must be a "two-way street", 412 U.S. at 475. The discovery imbalance existed in statutory scheme as well as in the operation of the rules of this case.

These statutes offend the Federal constitution and similar discovery such as that requested should have been granted.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

APPENDIX

SUPREME COURT OF ARKANSAS
No. Cr-82-25
Opinion Delivered Oct 4, 1982

EDWIN HOGGARD
Appellant,	APPEAL FROM THE WASHINGTON COUNTY CIRCUIT COURT, SECOND DIVISION
VS.	HONORABLE PAUL JAMESON,
STATE OF ARKANSAS	Judge
Appellee.	AFFIRMED.

STEELE HAYS, Associate Justice

Edwin Hoggard appeals his conviction of rape by engaging in deviate sexual activity with a six-year old boy. The state's case was based on the testimony of the boy that during a number of visits to appellant's apartment he had been shown pictures of homosexual acts between young men and boys with the suggestion that he and appellant engage in similar acts. The child said he was fondled and on two occasions appellant put the child's penis in his mouth.

These charges were reported to the police by the boy's mother, and a search warrant was issued, producing an abundance of homosexual pornography, primarily of adolescent boys. One of the two counts was dismissed and the jury convicted appellant on the remaining count, resulting in a sentence of ten years and a fine of $7,500.

Appellant raises numerous points for reversal, but we affirm the trial court.

I.

Appellant attacks the search warrant from several standpoints: first, that Arkanas' obscenity statute, Ark. Stat. Ann. 41-3565 (2) (Repl. 1977), making possession of obscene material a criminal offense, is unconstitutional. He asserts mere possession of such materials is protected by the First Amendment and cannot be made a criminal offense. The simple answer is that appellant is not charged with a violation of the statutes on obscenity and, hence, he has no standing to attack the constitutionality of the statute. Swaim v. State, 184 Ark. 1107, 44 S.W.2d 1098 (1933).

Second, he challenges the nighttime search. A.R.Cr.P. 12 (2) provides that search warrants shall be executed between 6:00 a.m. and 8:00 p.m. unless the issuing judicial officer finds reasonable cause to believe the objects to be seized are "in danger of imminent removal." This warrant was executed at 9:00 p.m. upon such a finding and we think the affidavit provided reasonable cause to believe the material was in danger of imminent removal. Appellant cites State v. Broadway, 269 Ark. 215, 599 S.W.2d 721 (1981), where we affirmed a trial court's suppression of evidence seized in a nighttime search. But the cases are distinguishable. There, no facts were given the issuing magistrate supporting the need for a nighttime search; the arresting officers simply stated that reasonable cause existed for an immediate search. Here, the affidavit stated that appellant was expected to leave the following morning for Conway and that he had said he sometimes took the materials, or part of them, to Conway and Little Rock. On that basis the circuit judge issuing the warrant found sufficient authority under Rule 13.2 (c) (ii), A.R.Cr.P., and we cannot say his finding was clearly erroneous.

Appellant challenges the search warrant on the ground that the affiant did not appear before the issuing judicial officer as required, he argues, by Rule 13.1(c) A.R.Cr.P. We disagree. Rule 13.1(c) does not require that the judicial officer interview witnesses, simply that he "may" examine them.

The argument that the affidavit does not establish the reliability of the witness under the two-fold test of Aguilar

v. Texas, 378 U.S. 108 (1964), must also fail. There the Supreme Court rejected a search warrant which stated only that "affiants have received reliable information from a credible person and do believe that heroin [and other drugs] are being kept at the above premises for purposes of sale . . ." In contrast, this affidavit goes into detail in establishing the reliability of the witnesses and the basis of their knowledge. It reveals the identity of the informants, explains their association with the appellant, states when and where the contacts occurred, and gives specific details about the materials said to be kept on the premises and their location in appellant's apartment and in his pick-up truck. The affidavit is more like one upheld in U.S. v. Ventresca, 380 U.S. 102 (1965) than the one struck down in Aguilar. We find it to be sufficient, when viewed with common sense.

II.

Appellant charges error in the refusal to order a discovery deposition of the young victim. The trial court did allow an interview with the child and his mother, with the prosecuting attorney present, and granted appellant's motion for psychiatric examinations into the child's competency. Appellant concedes our A.R.Cr.P., Rule 17.4 makes it discretionary with the trial court, but he insists that due process entitled him to take the discovery of the prosecution's witnesses. Appellant cites only dictum from Wardius v. Oregon, 412 U.S. 470 (1973). But the fallacy is the Wardius court was not dealing with the issue of whether the Due Process Clause gives an accused a right of discovery, but whether an Oregon statute giving the prosecution the right of discovery from the defendant's alibi witnesses was constitutional. The test was said to be whether Oregon law gave an accused reciprocal rights of discovery from prosecution witnesses and, finding such rights to be lacking, [1] The Oregon statute was struck down.

[1] Unlike Arkansas, Oregon did not require the State to reveal the names and addresses of witnesses, nor even require a bill of particulars.

Obviously, that is not the issue here. The Wardius court made it clear it was not suggesting the Due Process Clause of its own force required Oregon to adopt discovery procedures in criminal cases, citing U.S. v. Augenblick, 393 U.S. 348 (1969) and Cicerria v. Lagay, 357 U.S. 504 (1958), rather it was holding that where a state imposes discovery against a defendant, equivalent discovery rights must be given to a defendant.

We do not imply that there are never instances where due process may entitle a defendant to discovery rights, but we are unwilling to hold that due process invariably requies that an accused have the right to take the discovery deposition of the state's witnesses, including the victim. We prefer to leave the decision as our Rule 17 A.R.Cr.P. provides, to the trial judges to be exercised on a case-by-case basis, subject to a limited review on appeal. Here, the trial judge gave the appellant the right to interview the child and his mother and granted broad permission to have the child examined as to testimonial competency. We cannot say he should have done more.

III.

During the interview session defense counsel asked the mother whom she had dated, which prompted the prosecuting attorney to instruct her not to answer. Appellant argues a violation of Rule 19.1 A.R.Cr.P., which provides that neither side will instruct persons, other than the defendant, to refrain from discussing a case with opposing counsel.

Whether Rule 19.1 was breached is debatable; however, the prosecutor later withdrew his objection and told the witness she could answer if she wanted. Presumably she did not, as the trial court later denied a motion to order her to answer, finding the question improper. Appellant contends he was prejudiced, because his theory of the accusations against him was that they were a figment of the child's fantasies, induced, perhaps, by a movie he was thought to have seen. However, we cannot say this was reversible error. Standing alone, the question is irrelevant, and without some clearer explanation of how this lead could only have been pursued by knowing whom the witness had dated, we can find no abuse of discretion.

IV.

Next it is urged that the boy was not competent to testify. He was five years old when his contacts with the appellant began. Some of the alleged acts occurred after he became six. He was six and a half when the case was tried. Appellant concedes that some six year olds might be competent but he urges that this boy was unable to distinguish between fact and fantasy.

This court has consistently said no precise age of testimonial competency in children exists, and it is primarily for the trial court to determine whether a child has the ability to observe, remember and relate the truth of the matter being litigated and has a moral awareness of the duty to tell the truth. Harris v. State, 238 Ark. 780, 284 S.W.2d 477 (1964); Batchelor v. State, 217 Ark. 340, 230 S.W.2d 23; Payne v. State, 177 Ark. 413, 6 S.W.2d 832; Needham v. State, 215 Ark. 935, 224 S.W.2d 785. The issue rests within the trial court's sound discretion, Guthrie v. State, 188 Ark. 1081, 70 S.W.2d 39, Batchelor v. State, supra, and we will not reverse on appeal in the absence of manifest abuse, Yother v. State, 167 Ark. 492, 268 S.W.2d 861. On appeal, the error of the trial court in accepting or rejecting the testimony must be clear. Hudson v. State, 207 Ark. 18, 179 S.W.2d 165. Here, the trial court went into the issue of competency in depth, conducting a hearing with experts from both sides who had examined and tested the child with evident thoroughness. Two experts testified that he was above average in intelligence, able to receive information accurately, retain it, and capable of accurately reporting events which happened to him. Granted, there are contradictions in the child's testimony, as well as some odd remarks about being chased by panthers and men with guns. But these aspects are not sufficient to reverse the trial court's ruling because, unlike the testimony in Harris v. State, supra, on the essential elements of the case the child's testimony was generally responsive and consistent. Though unable to articulate what it meant to tell a lie, he knew what it meant to tell the truth and understood he was to do so. We will not attempt to detail his testimony; we are persuaded from a thorough reading of it that the trial court ruled correctly.

V.

The state asked the mother on redirect if she had asked her son whether he had been shown any pornographic pictures. Defense counsel objected to the question as leading and moved for a mistrial, which the trial court judge denied with the comment that the question was not answered and no damage occurred. If any prejudice occurred, which is doubtful, it was not so great that we can say the trial could not properly continue. Cobb v. State, 265 Ark. 527, 579 S.W.2d 612 (1976).

VI.

Over appellant's objection the state was permitted to introduce a pamphlet entitled "Boy Scout Sex Manual" containing a number of photographs of boys engaged in sexual acts. Appellant contends the prejudicial effect of the exhibit greatly outweighed any probative value and it should have been excluded under Rules 608 and 403, Uniform Rules of Evidence. We readily agree the material was prejudicial, it could hardly be otherwise. But the argument that its probative value was lacking fades under scrutiny. This pronography and the offense being tried had a clear correlation: the pronography depicted deviate sexual acts by young males and the crime charged was deviate sexual acts of a forty-two year-old man and a six-year-old boy. More importantly, the pronography was used as the instrument by which the crime itself was solicited— the child was encouraged to look at the pictures and then encouraged to engage in it. The value of the evidence as proof of the crime is obvious.

VII.

Appellant's next contention is that a defense motion for a directed verdict should have been granted because the statute as written does not include the acts described by the victim. The gist of the argument is, assuming the truth of the child's testimony, only the body of the accused was penetrated, i.e. the mouth of the appellant, and not the body of the victim. The argument is a throw-back to the definition of rape prior to the adoption of Ark. Stat. Ann. (1977 Supp.) #41-1803, when the offense applied only to the forcible penetration of a female by a male. But #41-1803 broadens the definition to eliminate the gender-based element of rape and to cover other deviate sexual acts, which earlier were generally classified as sodomy. A reading of #41-1803 and the accompanying commentary makes such intent plain— "Deviate sexual activity" is defined as "any act of sexual gratification involving: a) the penetration, however slight, of the anus or mouth of one person by the penis of another person."

On appeal, appellant has amplified the grounds for his motion to include matters not presented to the trial court and consequently not subject to our review.

VIII.

Finally, appellant submits there was a comment on the evidence. We are not convinced. In closing argument the prosecuting attorney told the jury the date on the information was not an element of the offense. Defense counsel objected that this was an argument on the law and the jury had not been so instructed. The prosecutor answered that the defense could also argue the law. The trial judge responded by saying, "Well, that's right. There's been no instruction sought on that and none offered. You may proceed with your argument, but do not talk to the jury about any law except what's covered by the instructions." Whether the trial court was agreeing with the prosecutor or the defense we cannot say, but we do not construe these words as a comment on the evidence in any sense; we must reject the claim of error.

The judgment is affirmed.

SUPREME COURT OF ARKANSAS
No. CR 82-25

Opinion Delivered Oct. 4, 1982

EDWIN HOGGARD,
APPELLANT,

V/

STATE OF ARKANSAS,

APPELLEE, DISSENTING OPINION

JOHN I. PURTLE, Associate Justice

I respectfully dissent because I think both the affidavit and search warrant are as phony as a $3 bill. I also feel the material presented to the jury was inflammatory and that its prejudicial effect drastically outweighed any relevant probative value that it may possibly have contained.

The affidavit for the search warrant, made by a deputy prosecuting attorney, stated that he was contacted by officer Hanna of the Fayetteville Police Deartment who gave him information concerning an alleged rape and/or carnal knowledge incident. The affidavit further stated that the alleged victim's mother stated certain things which her six year old son had told her. The six year old child, in my estimation from a review of the transcript, did not understand the meaning of an oath, and allegedly stated that appellant had taken "nude" pictures of him which he kept in various places around the premises. The child also stated that there were slides and magazines "depicting young boys in a nude state, some engaging in homosexual acts, including scenes with Hoggard." This is rather mature language for a six year old who could not understand most of the questions and who stated he saw pink panthers running through his house.

He allegedly said that the items, which were not described specifically, were in the appellant's room nearly every time he had visited there. It had been from two to six weeks since the alleged incident occurred. The informants allegedly stated that appellant had mentioned he sometimes carried this material to Conway or Little Rock. Appellant had telephoned on the date of the affidavit to ask about seeing the boy. The alleged victim had told his mother, some ten days before, about the activities in which he allegedly engaged. The basis for issuing the nighttime warrant, according to the affidavit, was that "it is feared" appellant "may leave" with some or all of the described evidence and "may be packing" it up tonight. There is not one factual statement in the affidavit to back up the nighttime search requirements as set out in our Rules of Criminal Procedure. The alleged findings were written out before any appearance was made before the issuing judge. The affiant was not sworn by the magistrate. In fact, all the magistrate did was sign a preprinted form on which the deputy prosecutor had written out in longhand certain unsupported allegations.

Rule 13.6 provides for the issuance and execution of search warrants for illegally possessing pictures and literature. However, private possession of obscene material is not illegal. According to the United States Supreme Court, an individual may possess material as obscene as he desires, so long as he does not display it to others or attempt some illegal use. United States v. Thirty-seven Photographs, 402 U.S. 363. (1971). The affidavit did not state how long the young boy had known the appellant but it did state that on almost every visit the boy made to appellant's room the material was present. There simply is nothing to support the allegation that the material was likely to be destroyed or moved before the next day. In fact, the indications on the face of the affidavit are that he would continue to hold this material in his possession. The rules state that only such materials as may be necessary "for evidentiary" use in a proceeding are to be sought. Ninety-nine percent of this material was not even introduced in evidence. The other material had been presented to the judge and had possibly been displayed before the jury even though it was not introduced. The one book which was introduced was used by the State in the closing arguments. It depicted young males in acts of masturbation and other deviate sexual activities with which appellant was not charged. The only allegation in the information in this case is that the appellant performed fellatio on this child. It is apparent to me that this material was introduced merely to inflame the passions of the jury. The only proper material which should have been before the jury would have been materials depicting the activities with which appellant was charged.

We are not here dealing with the guilt or innocence of the appellant. That is not the issue before this court. Although he may eventually be found guilty in a properly conducted trial, he should not be found guilty in a trial which violates his statutory and constitutional rights. I have no objection to the punishment and consider it appropriate upon one having been given a fair trial and properly convicted by a jury. My objections in this case primarily relate to the affidavit and search warrant, which I find woefully inadequate, and to the competency of the six year old boy to testify. The principles of the Constitution hold us to high standards in allowing a search of an individual's residence. These standards simply were not met in this case. When the Constitution can be sidestepped in such a blatant manner as this, I think we must all fear for the sanctity of our homes. And as for the child's testimony, I cannot in good conscience find that a youngster of such tender age who admitted numerous fantasies to the court and who could not appreciate the meaning of an oath should be the controlling factor in this case. It seems to me that the prosecution could have made a good case against the appellant without resorting to the tactics they used here. For these reasons, I must respectfully dissent.
